THIRSTY FOR AN ALTERNATIVE

Taking on big soda with Indie Pop BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

Richard Geil and Melanie Mikell are stoked on soda and passionate about pop. The two can tell you the finer points of varieties of plain tonic water. Their enthusiasm is infectious, like the flavors of their Indie Pop Soda — crisp, refreshing and, most of all, real. It's real because Indie Pop Soda uses food ingredients in their product (imagine that) as opposed to commercial sodas that are extract-based and use chemicals to replicate flavors.

Geil and Mikell are veteran bartenders who became frustrated with being forced to serve “big soda” (Coke, Pepsi and their subsidiaries). “We didn’t like the flavor profile,” says Geil. They noted the irony of fine dining restaurants emphasizing organic and local ingredients in food while serving mass-produced corporate pop as a beverage. “We have great food in the Pacific Northwest,” says Mikell, “but nothing as an alternative to the cocktail.”

This frustration inspired both Geil and Mikell to begin experimenting with making their own sodas from organic and locally sourced ingredients. Soon they joined forces and Indie Pop Soda was born.

Indie Pop Soda is to soda what the microbrewery is to beer. “We call it craft soda,” says Geil. So far Indie Pop Soda has the craft soda market cornered because ... well, they’re the only ones doing what they do — not only in Eugene but almost anywhere. “There’s people on the East Coast, I think, doing something similar in their region,” Geil says.

In a culture of convenience stores where Coca-Cola’s symbol is an international icon, mom-and-pop soda pop seems like a brand new brand-free phenomenon. But people have been serving up soda for centuries. Fruit-based soft drinks first showed up for sale in the 17th century and were made with water and lemon juice and sweetened with honey. But “big soda” wasn’t far behind. A French company received exclusive rights to sell the non-carbonated beverage in 1676.

A unique challenge to making soda with actual ingredients (like blended blackberries) rather than extracts is creating a repeatable product in a world where no two blackberries are the same. “There’s a lot of tasting at every step of the process” to ensure consistency, says Mikell. “It’s fun.”

At one time using real ingredients in pop wasn’t out of the ordinary. In 19th- and early 20th-century America, medicinal “mineral waters” were made with birch bark, dandelion and sarsaparilla and served at pharmacies and soda fountains. It wasn’t until post-war America that mass production forced a move away from all-natural flavors and toward chemicals and extracts.

Indie Pop makes their sodas at Nib Restaurant in Eugene and serves them locally with forced carbonation at Rabbit Bistro, Belly and the Party Cart. The project received support almost instantly — with 200 Facebook friends in 24 hours. Both Geil and Mikell say that they feel lucky to live in an area that puts so much emphasis on buying local and values a DIY ethos — especially in the food industry.

Mikell and Geil are developing a gun system to serve Indie Pop’s “big five” flavors (cola, diet cola, lemon lime, tonic water and ginger beer) in bars and restaurants regionally. They also see perhaps one day having a storefront where customers could get a growler of their favorite flavor and perhaps even get involved in the hands-on production process.

Indie Pop Soda isn’t just for kids — it’s also a great mixer in alcoholic beverages like the “gin gin mule” (a simple blend of gin, lime and Indie Pop’s ginger beer) and the more mysterious “dark and stormy” (rum and ginger beer.) The gin gin mule refreshes while stimulating taste buds and going down (too) easy. The “dark and stormy” is less refreshing and more of a comforting warm blanket to pass a winter night with. In both drinks the intense real ginger flavor makes commercial ginger ales taste thin and metallic.

The Indie Pop duo has tried more than thirty flavors ranging from conventional (blackberry, watermelon, peach) to the slightly exotic (hops and honey). But Mikell is quick to point out that Indie Pop Soda is not about blowing people’s minds with exotic flavors. “We’re not making turkey dinner soda,” she jokes. She says their most popular flavors have been grapefruit and cucumber-basil.

What’s the craziest flavor the pair have tried? “Cream cheese soda,” says Geil. “It wasn’t too bad.” ■

THUNDER IN A CUP

Last Stand Coffee Co. brings more beans to the Whit BY RICK LEVIN

In late June of 1876, an armed force concocted of Lakota, Arapaho and Northern Cheyenne warriors waged a bloody battle against the Seventh Regiment of the U.S. Cavalry, which was led by Col. George Armstrong Custer. The ignoble outcome of that campaign struck a ferocious blow to the imperial arrogance of U.S. Indian Policy, and it waxed a gloss of exotic fatalism on the tarnished iconography of the Son of Morning Star (the Indian name for old George). None of Custer's men survived to tell the tale.

Custer's Last Stand was a bitch. And history has seen oodles of infamous last stands. Napoleon. Masada. Charlie Sheen. Rarely do these moments signal anything but botched pride, violent futility and bad karma for the powers that be (we don't call it "Goliath's Last Stand," right?). Every once in a while, though, someone makes a last stand worth celebrating: Peacefully defiant and righteously fed up, such insurgencies aim to build rather than destroy, educate rather than decimate, and they herald a revolution of inclusion, a riot of good vibes.

Coffee, anyone?

Having seen enough of overlong pulls, mealy cream and acid backwash, Eugene java maven Joshua Henrikson put his foot down last year and said: "No more." More precisely, no more burnt coffee beans fobbed off as gourmet. No more stagnant shots. No more McLattes. No more swill and waste.

"I just kind of felt like it was the end of the line for a lot of reasons," says Henrikson as he sits sipping a latte and soaking up sunshine at his new Whiteaker café, The Last Stand Coffee Co. The Colorado native is certainly in his element. Having served in the military and then the service industry, where he's done everything from washing dishes to waiting tables, Henrikson finally decided to make a go of it on his own.

"Society itself is so whacked out in general, and I'd reached the end of myself working for people," says Henrikson, who over the past 8 years has devoted himself to becoming an expert on all facets of coffee, from crop to cup. Opening July of 2010, at 298 Blair Blvd., just a few blocks down from Tiny Tavern, Last Stand is where Hendrikson has laid his claim to his own private bistro, staking his knowledge and skill on Eugene's willingness to chase down a top-notch buzz.

"It's kind of the last stand for artisan beans," he says, pointing out that Last Stand specializes in single-origin (non-blend) beans from places as far ranging as Ethiopia, Nicaragua and the divine Blue Mountains of Jamaica. "The beans are where it all starts. We kind of feel like artisan coffee is being flushed down. We want to make sure that traditional methods stay."

To this end, Henrikson — at 33, a chronic do-it-yourselfer — drew up designs for a custom roaster heated by propane and driven solely by person power, whether that be pedaling or hand-cranking. The idea was to build a rig for maximum control, even while minimizing its ecological impact. And the contraption is gorgeous, like some copper-plated dream machine from a Terry Gilliam movie, wheels spinning and smoke belching from the steel stack.

Quality inheres in this machine itself. Seated at the controls like a pilot or a seamstress, feet pumping, watching, listening, Henrikson is intimately connected to each 5-pound batch of hand-selected beans he roasts. Call it the Zen and the art of coffee making. It takes around 45 minutes of relaxed concentration and metonymic motion to roast a single batch. Pedal too fast and the beans cook unevenly; too slow, they burn; stop pedaling altogether and you've got a handful of ash.

Already, in just a year's time, Henrikson has seen his beans hit several local retail shelves, including those at Capella Market, Market of Choice, Sundance Natural Foods and the Kiva. Outlets in Portland and other nearby cities also have shown an interest in carrying Last Stand beans.

To know beans is to love beans. Henrikson admits he actually feels sorry when he sees beans that are poorly roasted, a bit of latter-day animism that recalls the tribal hunter blessing the slain deer before it's butchered. And such DIY technique flies in the face of mechanical methods of mass roasting.

"When you take it from something that's commercially intense and bring it to an art form, and then you incorporate hands-on techniques, you really do become more at one with the bean," he says. "But it's hard to get people to appreciate what goes into the cup."

At Last Stand, what goes into the cup dictates how it goes into the cup. It's only logical — because, really, why go to all that time and trouble roasting a bean that is, as Henrikson puts it, "somewhere near perfection," if you're only going to wind up sloshing swill into a mug?

With steampunk power driving the production end, Henrikson taps tried-and-true ways when the time arrives to pour a primo jolt of java. Last Stand employs nine different traditional methods to make sure the hand-crafted beans are squeezed just-so into the cup — everything from ristretto espresso shots, French press and cold-water extract to classic Turkish coffee and siphoning, a kind of Rube Goldberg process that works on similar principle as the gravity bong, drawing hot water upward into a chambered shot of pure, smooth goodness.

'The beans are where it all starts. We kind of feel like artisan coffee is being flushed down. We want to make sure that traditional methods stay.'

— JOSHUA HENRICKSON

Henrikson has put in countless hours learning about brewing and steaming methods — requiring “a lot of reading, a lot of practice and a lot of just passion,” he says — in order to best bring out the intrinsic qualities of the little green nugget. For instance, he makes sure his ristretto espresso shots are in the Northern Italian mode, so that “you’re just getting the heart ... You’re pulling the intense flavors out of the bean” with little waste and without losing much caffeine.

In addition to coffee, Last Stand offers a selection of specialty drinks that includes London Fog (high-grade Earl Grey tea sweetened with raw honey and cinnamon in steamed milk), the House of Love (made with coconut milk, organic vanilla syrup, lime zest and cardamom) and a House Chai that he believes is the best in town.

On the day we spoke, Henrikson suggested I try a cup of his pride and joy: The Jamaican Blue Mountain, an extremely rare and highly prized coffee bean that he said is predominantly the domain of the rich and famous; landing a batch was a project two years in the making, he says proudly. The beans themselves, which he roasts with surgical precision, retail for more than $80 a pound. A single cup costs eight bucks.

Listen: It’s worth it. Upon my second sip of Blue Mountain, I noticed that it was not only complexly bodied and utterly devoid of acidity or bitterness, but that its tectonic flavors continued to unravel in my mouth long after the juice was down the gullet. By the third sip, I began questioning the legality of the stuff: My skull felt scrubbed clean by helium, wild with space and clarity, while my body levitated about two inches off the ground without any of the usual jitters and jetlag of over-caffeination. I was gassed to run a marathon and then, like, finish my novel. As in right now.

COFFEE BEAN ROASTER HE DESIGNED

Often, such refined and rarefied knowledge such as that Henrikson possesses about coffee can lead to a sniffy, shrugging kind of contempt for the uninitiated layman — think of wine snobs, whose blowzy, acidic bullshit about soy sauce and cedarwood seems intended to make you choke on your three-buck Chuck. Last Stand is looking to reverse the sham elitism that can scare off the otherwise curious. This is one of the reasons Henrikson roasts his beans right in the open, in the café’s outdoor-seating area.

“I like the idea of sharing art,” he says, noting that he considers it an honor to be imitated. “It means you’re doing something right,” Henrikson says. “Why hide what we’re doing? We’re proud of it.”

This idea of sharing and community building was one of the principle motives for establishing the Last Stand Coffee Co., he says. The building and back patio have the slow, inviting aura of a Mexican cantina, with trinkets and antiques and musical instruments lying around. There is a turntable and a collection of old vinyl, board games, magazines. The backyard has gardens growing tomatoes, peppers, raspberries. There are poetry readings, open mics and live music nights. On Saturday, Sept. 10, at 7 pm, Henrikson will host an inaugural “coffee flight” for customers who want a first-hand experience of several different bean profiles.

“Something new is going on all the time,” he says. “There are so many artists coming through this place, you can’t keep up with it. Most people come here to talk to each other and set aside their work.”

Some customers have gone so far as to pick up a broom and pitch in when the place is particularly busy. “We have people offering to volunteer all the time,” Henrikson says. “It’s unreal. It’s not something I want to have happen, but it’s really inspiring. That’s what it’s about.” ■

A BITTER-SWEET SYMPHONY

Coffee plus dessert equals bliss BY KENDALL FIELDS

What’s better than a slice of moist, fudgy chocolate cake? Or what about a ramekin of silky crème brûlée? Both desserts need something bitter to balance out all of that sweetness and accentuate their flavors — and coffee is the perfect partner. Each dessert alone is delicious, but pairing it with a coffee drink will elevate it to ecstasy. When it comes down to it, coffee and dessert make for an unbeatable pair.

Brian Hebb, who owns Red Agave and Cowfish, says there must be “something evolutionary to it — bitter flavors, creamy flavors and sugar go together nicely.

“Everybody is so used to having dessert and coffee,” Hebb says, “but the combinations that sing are those that really pick up the flavors of the dessert.”

Hebb says the most obvious dish to pick from the delicious dessert selections at Red Agave is the flourless chocolate molten tort with an espresso crème anglaise, since the chefs have already incorporated coffee into the dessert itself.

If you are looking to try something more unusual, he says a trickier dish to pair with a coffee drink is the pineapple upside down cake topped with a caramel sea salt ice cream. Hebb would pair the cake with the espresso Alexander, made with Crater Lake’s Cofia, a hazelnut espresso vodka.

The fruitiness of the pineapple and the creaminess of the ice cream are balanced perfectly by the bitterness of the coffee drink. “But if you are having that,” Hebb cautions, “you probably want to share.”

At Sweet Life Patisserie, coffee and fruit is also a must-try pairing. Sam Greenspan, a friendly newbie working the counter, recommends the classic tiramisu and coffee — but with a citrusy twist. Greenspan selects a slice of Sweet Life’s heavenly tiramisu paired with a Borgia. The tiramisu is light and fluffy, drizzled with a dark chocolate sauce. The sponge cake is soaked in rum and espresso and is just soggy enough to melt on the tongue. And the tiramisu rum-cream is light and decadent. The Borgia is a frothy and bitter drink similar to a mocha, with equal parts espresso and hot chocolate topped with whipped cream and bits of orange zest. Paired with the foamy Borgia and that zing from the orange zest, the tiramisu becomes much more complex and delicious.

“They are perfect complements,” Greenspan says, “because the chocolate is still present, but light and flavorful. And the tiny bit of rum complements the fruit in the coffee.”

Right next door to Sweet Life, Nib also boasts some delightful dessert and coffee pairings. Co-owner of the modern eatery Tiffany Petry shared two playful examples of coffee and dessert combinations.

The first is a chocolate almond paste cake with espresso caramel topped with kumquat sorbet and garnished with a strawberry-kumquat salad and cocoa nibs, along with a coffee orange almandine. The iced coffee, with Kahlua, amaretto, orange liqueur and chocolate shavings, is the true counterpart of the kumquat dessert — “the iced coffee mimics the dessert to bring out the flavor,” Petry says.

Her other recommendation is Murcia Curado cheese topped with a date puree and butterscotch sauce eaten with a strong French press coffee. The Spanish goat cheese along with the sweet sauce and the full-bodied coffee is a prime example of how any dessert is made better by a coffee drink. Petry says that bitter and sweet are two flavors that really balance each other.

CHOCOLATE GATEAU AND MINT LATTE FROM EUGENE CITY BAKERY

McKenzie Davie, who worked her way up from barista to baker at Eugene City Bakery, agrees that it is “the combination of the sweet and bitter that is amazing.” Of the many desserts and gourmet coffee drinks to choose from at the bakery, two that stand out are a white chocolate crème brûlée paired with a candied ginger mocha and a chocolate gateau with a frosted mint iced latte. In the first combination, the creaminess of the crème brûlée is matched impeccably with the punch of the ginger and the bitterness of the coffee. In the second pairing of the chocolate gateau (which just so happens to be gluten-free) with the frosted mint iced latte, a subtle mint flavor cuts through the rich, dense, fudge-like cake and is reminiscent of mint chocolate chip ice cream. It is a perfect and refreshing treat on a hot summer’s day.

Whatever the pairing is, Hebb says coffee drinks mimic digestifs and are natural to have at the end of a very satisfying meal to alleviate the too-full feeling. And dessert just so happens to follow. ■

TWEAKING THE FORMULA

Local coffee shops design their own versions of the Italian soda BY BRIT MCGINNIS

Seltzer water. Ice. Flavored syrup. These three ingredients make the one drink that any enemy of coffee can order at a café: the Italian soda.

Invented by Rinaldo and Ezilda Torre (also the founders of the Torani syrup company), the drink first grew popular in 1925 San Francisco. Today, there are more than a thousand different possible flavors of soda (care for a sip of toasted marshmallow?). But the recipe itself is so basic that it's easy for peddlers to fall into a rut. Luckily, coffee shops in Eugene are hard at work keeping it fresh.

VERO ESPRESSO

The Italian sodas sipped within this sprawling café are mild, not too sweet and definitely refreshing. The baristas work with all-natural syrups from the Bend-based company MySyrup, and the very Oregonian combination soda with lavender and blackberry syrups is one of their most popular. But perhaps most impressive is their homemade whipped cream, which has an explosive (but delicious) reaction when stirred into an Italian soda. "We have to tell people to be careful," says barista Reba Rice with a mischievous smile.

BARRY'S ESPRESSO BAKERY & DELI

Serving mostly a college and hospital crowd, this nifty shop on East 12th Avenue boasts a stunning 42 syrup options, though the availability of each flavor fluctuates. Raspberry is the most popular flavor (indeed, one of the most popular flavors in Eugene), but offbeat options like tiramisu and macadamia nut lure adventurous taste buds. There's no official rule at Barry's on how much ice or syrup the barista will utilize in mixing a soda. They'll just come up and ask the question all drink snobs and sugar addicts love hearing — how sweet do you like it?

PERUGINO

Next door to the historic Smeede Hotel, there isn't a single Torani bottle in sight at this café-slash-art gallery (they prefer CE, Monin and Café KaKow). In terms of style, Perugino offers sodas that are initially 75-85 percent ice (as opposed to the more typical 50 percent). Why so much? Baristas say they want to make sure that the syrup is never warmer than the rest of the soda — a real risk, considering most coffee shops store syrup bottles at room temperature.

MORNING GLORY CAFÉ

This bright vegan café has 12 basic flavors to mix and match, perfect for the traffic of Amtrak travelers and bustling breakfast crowds. "It's rare that people ask for something we don't have," says barista Liz Graessle. Morning Glory is unique in its stirring method — instead of using a rod to mix the ingredients, the baristas transfer the liquid to a second cup then back to the original. Graessle says that this guarantees the customer won't taste straight seltzer water in the first sip.

PERK ESPRESSO

Obsessed with fresh ingredients, the fledgling coffee shop is working toward the goal of using only syrups made on location. Owner Aaron Chester is especially proud of his caramel syrup, made from what he calls authentically "browned sugar." (A soda made with this syrup tastes like a liquefied Christmas cookie.) Perk also offers popular fruity options like cherry, but with a natural twist. If you're lucky, your raspberry soda will include fresh, locally grown raspberries crunched into the ice. ■

A WALK DOWN MILKSHAKE LANE

Closing summer on a frozen note BY NILS HOLST

With the long days of summer drawing to a close, one develops a certain nostalgia for the simpler things in life: long walks on the beach, a day at the pool, 25-cent lemonade stands, the Eugene Celebration parade and milkshakes.

While most of these things are beyond the reach of us over-stressed and nihilistic adults, milkshakes are one bit of nostalgia everybody in Eugene can partake in, a proud tradition that has been passed down from one corner storeowner to the next for generations.

After extensive consultation with local experts, we here at EW have compiled a list of some of the best places in town to get your shake on.

First off, there's Fins Drive In at 4090 Main St. in Springfield. We love our neighbors to the east, and when it comes to shakes, Fins knows how to do it right. With more than 25 base flavors plus seasonal specials, Fins certainly isn't lacking in the variety department, and for 35 cents extra you can combine flavors, creating endless possibilities. Malts are an extra 25 cents if you want that extra old-fashioned malt shop feel.

When asked why people keep coming back to Fins, employee Ben Smith says that "more than anything it's the nostalgia. The nostalgia of the '50s and stuff, people can come out and have a milkshake just like their grandma used to make."

Prince Pücklers on the corner of 19th and Agate specializes in ice cream, making it a natural choice for milkshake connoisseurs. The store carries 49 flavors and allows customers to combine up to three flavors, leading to wacky creations like strawberry/banana/French roast or peanut butter/Oregon Bing cherry/chocolate almond. Pücklers' fruit sorbets and ice creams are made from fresh local ingredients, and are especially popular during summertime.

Nobody understands the serious business of milkshakes better than Jim West, owner of Dickie Jo's, near 13th and Pearl. Using high-quality natural ingredients ("the fancy stuff," according to Jim) and specialized equipment, Dickie Jo's churns out some of the richest milkshakes in town.

Jo's has six flavors, the most popular of which are chocolate, vanilla and strawberry. According to West, it all comes down to the butterfat in the product.

"I'd like to think we have the best milkshakes in town," West says. He adds, "Most of these guys are playing around with four to eight percent butterfat," and explains that Jo's uses no less than 10 percent. "The reason for that is because butterfat is so expensive."

Sweet Life Patisserie at 755 Monroe St. is also in the milkshake-making business but uses hand-made hormone-free gelato. "Starting with a really dense gelato is much different than ice cream," says co-owner Catherine Reinhart. "It makes an amazing milkshake."

Last but certainly not least is Billy Mac's on Jefferson and 19th. Although it doesn't offer a cornucopia of flavors, and prices are a bit steep in comparison (a regular shake is $5), the shakes are still worth checking out. With a homey old-time flavor and rich, creamy consistency, Billy Mac's has maintained a loyal following. Traditional to the core, Billy Mac's offers chocolate, vanilla and strawberry. ■

TEA TOTALERS

For everyone from grandmas to hipsters BY SHANNON FINNELL

Josh Chamberlain waves his cocktail shaker vigorously. “It’s really important to get a good shake,” he says. “It gives it some froth.” The intoxicating beverage he’s mixing up isn’t alcohol, it’s iced tea, “the emerald,” to be precise. It’s the iced tea that Chamberlain recommends to new customers, so they can start off with a distinct and refreshing drink. It’s so refreshing, in fact, that it leaves the drinker with a clean just-brushed-your-teeth feeling, despite being green tea without a bit of mint.

Chamberlain’s tea house, J-Tea, has been importing and selling carefully selected tea from Taiwan and China since 2005, when he returned from six years of living and studying in Taiwan. He says the relationship between Taiwan’s food culture and socializing drew him to the tea business. “The tea allows people to connect,” Chamberlain says. “People didn’t know what to talk to me about, but if we sit together for five minutes and talk about tea ...” he trails off as he pours a cold one.

J-Tea’s iced tea list is short and sweet, but it probably won’t be for long. Chamberlain started serving iced tea at the shop for the first time this summer, and his iced tea goals are already ambitious. “I want to have 20 unique, awesome ice teas,” he says. “There’s no reason to put it on the list just because you can put it over water.” His green raspberry and raspberry rooibos iced teas include local raspberries cooked down to concentrate.

In addition to the iced teas in the shop, Chamberlain has plans to expand with a bike food cart that will be able to “go where the people are” and sell iced tea from a bumper bar. He says he also sells a lot of “Eugene breakfast,” which he also provides as the house black tea at Supreme Bean.

Kateseen Gill loves tea for its social culture as well, but her tea education took place while she was growing up in Seychelles, a nation of islands north of Madagascar. She didn’t go into business until 1995, though, when she and her daughter were living in Eugene. She started with $30 of merchandise, and quickly learned about imports, packing, shows and sales. She says she immediately learned that quality tea was the only way her loose-tea business would survive, and now, “once they taste the product, they drop the teabag!”

Tea Lady Teas has grown to 150 blends, largely from customer requests that proved popular. They line the walls at the shop she opened in 2009, with sample tins below the boxes encouraging browsers to sniff the teas. Gill says that friends often ask her what it’s been like opening a business in a recession. “My life has been a recession!” she says, laughing. “I’ve been playing it tight to the chest for years!”

Techi-tea, a vanilla and black tea blend, is one of Gill’s best sellers, but she also recommends the sereni-tea — for grown-ups and kids. She created the hibiscus, mint and orange blend when her daughter wanted Kool-Aid as a child, and Gill was determined not to give in to the sugary drink.

Gill’s hard-won success inspired her to look for other women, especially single moms, to do business with. She imports some of her teas from woman growers in Kenya and Madagascar, and she’s hoping to work with a woman she met on vacation in Mexico to obtain some hibiscus varieties.

Locally, Gill’s sales are weathering the recession without a problem, and for those who drop by her Willamette Street shop, she just might disappear behind her Wizard of Oz-like curtain to brew a pot of tea. ■

FROM WANDERING GOAT

6.5 oz. Ninkasi Oatis or Oakshire Overcast Espresso Stout
1.5 oz. espresso

Pull the espresso directly onto the glass of beer while there is still a head, so that the head captures the crema off the espresso. The heat stays on top while the beer-espresso mixture is noticeably cooler.

THE RITUAL

Step N°9 : The Bestowal

The perfect Stella Artois is not only poured. It is served.
A ritual that for centuries has left patrons the world over watching and wanting. And this, their refreshing reward.
So before you say cheers, expect to hear a few of them.
